

Global Unity • End Wars • Reach for the Cosmic Future

United Nations, leaders of all nations, brothers and sisters of the world:

Today we face a fundamental truth concerning the survival of our species.

First, picture these scenes: A father digging through rubble for his daughter's schoolbag, inside it half a piece of bread still uneaten. A mother celebrating her child's birthday in an air-raid shelter, using a phone flashlight as a candle. Every day, over two billion families around the world are having meals, sending children to school, worrying about mortgages — none of them are discussing at the dinner table which neighboring country to declare war on today.

War never begins at the dinner table. It begins in conference rooms, on maps, with words like "strategic buffer zone."

Those who truly disrupt world stability, breed estrangement between peoples, and trigger regional turmoil have never been ordinary citizens. They are merely a small minority — those entrenched in narrow development thinking, obsessed with regional gamesmanship, advocating confrontation, and easily pushing situations toward conflict.

Today we solemnly proclaim to all humanity a universal truth, an iron law of our world:

Anyone who first proposes war, actively initiates conflict, incites division, and manufactures hatred across borders — he is not the enemy of one nation alone. He is the enemy of all humanity. He is the enemy of Mother Earth.

Note carefully: I said "person," not "nation." Nations can be misunderstood, coerced, represented against their will. But the specific individual who makes the decision must be seen, named, and recorded by history.

We remain steadfast in our founding commitment: respecting the independent existence of all sovereign states, protecting the deep roots of diverse national cultures, embracing unique local customs, while fully acknowledging each nation's legitimate security concerns and developmental rights.

The only change we advocate is the shift away from rigid confrontational thinking, from zero-sum game mentalities that exacerbate conflicts and hinder global cooperation.

As such narrow oppositional thinking gradually dissolves, the roots of worldly strife will fade, and regional divides will slowly melt away. What we seek to transform is never any nation's unique characteristics, culture, or development model, but rather the partial perceptions within people's hearts — the stubborn clinging to contention, the pointless internal depletion.

Let all people pause and reflect deeply, seeking the truest core of life:

Why did humanity come to this planet?

If merely to seize territory, how are we different from beasts fighting over feeding grounds? If merely to plunder resources, how are we different from ants carrying food? If merely to dominate, the dinosaurs ruled the earth for 170 million years — what did they leave behind?

Nothing but fossils.

The deepest meaning of human existence is to travel through this world experiencing its myriad forms, cherishing the warmth of mortal life, feeling all the beauty along the journey. Every person is simply an ordinary traveler walking through this realm of red dust.

Consider this state of clarity: When people visit distant lands, they never try to claim the place as their own just because they stayed briefly, nor do they block others from enjoying beautiful scenery simply because they favor it.

Everyone understands that encounters in this world are fleeting, gatherings eventually part, and nothing need be forcibly possessed or controlled.

A human life lasts a mere few decades — less than thirty thousand days at most. Earth has existed for 4.6 billion years. In the vast river of time, a single human life is but a fleeting instant, tiny and brief.

For such a hurried existence, there is no need to fight endlessly over inches of territory, nor to ignite wars that displace millions and plunge them into suffering.

This truth of life is simple and clear. With quiet reflection, it resonates in every heart. We are all passing travelers in this world. When we depart, none of our external possessions can be taken along. After a century's ups and downs, all glory returns to dust.

Our long journey should be one of gentle kindness, mutual support, appreciating together the beauty of mountains and rivers. We must never allow ourselves to be hijacked by a few people's stubborn obsessions, causing countless innocent civilians to bear the pain of separation and fall into abysses of suffering.

Looking back at how the world conducts itself: young people easily quarrel and argue when faced with problems. The root cause is that their minds are not yet mature — they don't understand tolerance, can't peacefully resolve differences, and act purely on impulse.

But mature individuals, when facing contradictions and disagreements, always choose calm discussion and honest communication, dissolving barriers through understanding and tolerance. They know that fighting over pride cannot solve problems and only ends in mutual destruction.

Looking at the entire course of human civilization, many regions today still harbor resentment over border lines, dispute over resource distribution, and refuse to yield over differing development philosophies.

Such primitive confrontational methods prove that human civilization remains in a stage of immaturity, still accustomed to handling complex conflicts in crude, simplistic ways.

A civilized society entering maturity should embrace inclusive generosity. When differences arise, negotiate amicably. When conflicts emerge, communicate honestly. When danger threatens, join hands to overcome it together. Completely abandon the backward model of confrontation at every turn.

Thus it becomes clear: all regional conflicts and tensions are direct manifestations of human civilization not yet reaching full maturity — lingering marks of immaturity along the path of growth.

A truly mature human civilization will inevitably move beyond meaningless strife, focusing its collective energy on the bright road of shared global development.

Our most urgent mission now is to help human civilization grow steadily, abandon extreme confrontational attitudes, dissolve global divisions with wisdom and tolerance, and resolve all conflicts with warmth and goodwill.

We also remind all peace-loving people: harboring sincere desires for peace is far from enough. You must maintain clear rationality and accurately distinguish various deliberately guided currents of opinion.

When false narratives deliberately stoke panic, one-sided rhetoric amplifies prejudices, and extremist ideologies erect walls between people, everyone must hold fast to their inner truth, rationally distinguish fact from fiction, and see through the real intentions hidden behind the rhetoric.

Guarding peace in this world begins with keeping your own heart clear and transparent, never allowing negative emotions or biased speech to cloud your judgment.

We must both hold fast to our desire for a stable life and actively break down the interpersonal barriers erected around us, shatter the ideological fortresses deliberately constructed, letting goodwill and inclusion spread across every inch of the world.

When people gaze at the vast starry sky, those dry riverbeds, those traces of possible past life, remind us of one thing: a planet can die.

We don't know if Mars once had civilization, but we do know — Earth can die too.

The inhabitants of Easter Island once cut down their last tree, then fought each other for remaining resources until their civilization collapsed. They weren't destroyed by foreign enemies. They were destroyed by their own divisions.

If humanity continues to let divisive ideologies spread unchecked, allows disagreements to ferment and intensify, clings to territorial boundaries in mutual suspicion and confrontation, then one day Earth will follow the same path, ending in civilizational decay and a barren homeland.

Looking further ahead, the existential crises humanity faces have never been limited to internal divisions.

Imagine a day when an asteroid races toward Earth, threatening all life. At that moment, all territorial divisions, interest disputes, and ideological differences will lose all meaning entirely.

Facing a cosmic catastrophe, all of humanity shares one blue home, rides one vessel of life. No nation can save itself alone. No region can stand apart from danger.

If we remain fixated on internal conflict, wasting immense resources on mutual defense preparations, when the true interstellar crisis arrives, humanity will be helpless. We will watch helplessly as our home is devastated, extinguishing the hope of civilization's continuation.

Times change rapidly. Technology advances daily. Protective equipment and weapons become ever more sophisticated. In the past, local conflicts caused limited casualties. Today, a large-scale confrontation could engulf the entire globe, directly threatening the foundation of human civilization.

Human life is precious. To be born into this world with a living soul, able to perceive all its beauty, is no small fortune. Human civilization has taken thousands of years to form. Once broken, there is no chance to start over.

Let us contemplate the ultimate truth contained in the parable of heaven and hell: Under identical circumstances, with identical tools and conditions, in hell everyone is selfish, cares only for themselves, refuses to help others, fights and plunders — and all end in agony. In heaven, everyone acts with love, helps each other, works together in mutual support — and all live in abundance and peace.

Earth today stands at this crossroads. One thought of unity brings peace and prosperity. One thought of division brings chaos and destruction. Which path we take depends entirely on the choice and commitment of all humanity.

Here we reaffirm our shared ultimate proposition — the only correct path forward for humanity's long-term development and civilization's eternal inheritance:

First, uphold the basic principle of sovereign equality among all nations. Never impose on other countries' systems or cultural development by any means. Fully respect each region's unique developmental characteristics and cultural differences. Always adhere to the international principles of seeking common ground while reserving differences, harmony without uniformity.

Second, build consensus on integrated global development. Borders have never been barriers to mutual opposition, nor walls breeding conflict. National borders are like elegant fences between gardens — we appreciate each other's unique customs and cultures, respect diverse development models and traditions. Nations should engage in friendly exchanges across borders, share resources, exchange development experiences, share achievements and joys, abandoning confrontational postures and territorial disputes.

Third, establish the highest axiom for all humanity: Whoever actively initiates war is the enemy of all humanity. The world must jointly resist, jointly stop, and jointly resolve such crises!

Fourth, clarify our shared core mission: unite to defend against unknown celestial disasters, protect our blue Earth home, and explore the boundless cosmos together. This is the central direction all nations should work toward shoulder to shoulder!

At this moment, with utmost goodwill and reverence for life, we extend a sincere, gentle plea to leaders of more than two hundred countries and regions — a plea rooted in humanity's long-term survival.

We deeply understand that every nation has its own core security concerns, urgent development needs, and geopolitical realities. Behind every national decision lies a heavy responsibility to its people and homeland. We fully respect every country's position and deeply understand each nation's sincere commitment to protecting its home.

Looking back over thousands of years of human civilization, surveying the vast cosmos, we must clearly recognize: the foundation of every nation's stable development, the future hope of every ethnic group's continued existence, the beautiful vision of global citizens' well-being — all depend on Earth's peace and the steady continuation of human civilization.

Therefore we sincerely hope that all nations can gradually set aside accumulated grievances, ease historical contradictions, and resolve opposing positions and regional conflicts with gentle, inclusive approaches.

Let every nation focus on guarding its own territory, preserving its unique historical civilization and folk culture, maintaining its own pace of steady development, advancing securely without coveting others' resources, without breeding suspicion, without harming friendly relations or destabilizing regions.

From now on, let there be no more endless disputes over inches of land, no more border confrontations draining national strength, no more squandering of resources on mutual suspicion, no more deploying top talent and advanced technology for internal balance of power struggles.

Humanity must clearly recognize: what we truly need to unite against is never our neighbors or kin, but incoming asteroids, unknown cosmic disasters, interstellar radiation threats, and all hidden existential dangers — everything that hinders the long-term continuation of human civilization.

Therefore we earnestly hope all nations can work together in concert:

Gradually transition existing military forces, top research talent, core industrial resources, and unique technological advantages from internal balancing and mutual suspicion toward joint defense against cosmic threats, exploration of space, and development of new interstellar frontiers.

Let advanced space defense systems, aerospace technologies, and elite scientists completely break free from mutual containment. Let them devote themselves fully to monitoring celestial trajectories, predicting cosmic disasters, deflecting dangerous asteroids, building a unified planetary defense system, constructing a global space early warning network, researching deep space mysteries, developing interstellar survival technologies, and opening new homes for humanity beyond Earth.

Earth's resources are abundant. With today's advanced technology, we can fully meet everyone's basic needs, allowing all to live in comfort and security.

There is absolutely no need for humanity to engage in internal conflict. What we should collectively overcome are diseases, cosmic mysteries, interstellar survival challenges, and all practical difficulties blocking civilization's progress.

The only correct path forward for human civilization is crystal clear: completely stop meaningless internal consumption, eliminate hidden causes of conflict at their roots, unite all humanity's strength, jointly face cosmic survival crises, explore the vast universe, venture into unknown territories, and expand humanity's new frontier among the stars!

From now on, humanity will no longer fight over tiny parcels of Earth. Together we will break through our planetary cradle, rush toward the brilliant sea of stars, build a mature interstellar civilization, realize the vision of peace and prosperity across worlds, and let human civilization spread throughout the universe, generation after generation, forever!

Now, let all people calmly examine two fundamentally different paths before humanity —

The First Path: The Road to Decline and Ruin.

If we continue to let extremist ideologies spread, allow divisive figures to amplify conflicts and create opposition, humanity will remain trapped in internal discord and mutual attrition.

When the true existential crisis comes — when a massive asteroid races toward Earth — nations will still be fragmented, resources wasted on internal defenses, top scientists consumed by developing weapons against each other, with no one studying how to counter cosmic threats, no force capable of facing interstellar danger alone.

One day, humanity will stand helpless before disaster, descending step by step into civilizational collapse and extinction.

This path, fraught with peril, is one humanity must never tread.

The Second Path: The Road to Light and Prosperity.

If from this moment forward, every person of goodwill actively promotes harmonious coexistence, guides and resolves extremist ideologies, reduces the seeds of conflict at their source, lets the ideals of peaceful coexistence and mutual support take root in every heart, and completely abandons all pointless strife —

Then pause and think deeply: The blue Earth, after billions of years of transformation, gave birth to intelligent, sensitive human beings, endowing them with extraordinary minds, skillful hands, and eyes capable of gazing at the starry expanse — this was never accidental.

Earth has experienced countless changes and knows that the universe is full of uncertainty. It knows that one day it will face unknown cosmic crises and sudden interstellar disasters.

Earth nurtured humanity precisely to make us the guardians of this blue home, the protectors of all life, the stewards of this vibrant world.

Humanity's innate mission has never been internal conflict, mutual estrangement, or opposition. It is to protect our precious Earth home, to journey together toward the sea of stars, to extend the torch of civilization for millennia.

If we sink into internal strife, harbor suspicions, waste our God-given talents, and betray Earth's billions of years of nurturing care, we will have failed all living things and betrayed our very purpose.

When the cosmic crisis finally comes — no matter where the dangerous object originates, no matter its size — united humanity, pooling all wisdom and strength, can predict and defuse the danger before it strikes, protecting all families on Earth.

No interstellar threat can breach the fortress of a united humanity.

Beyond protecting Earth, we can step beyond our planetary boundaries, rush toward the boundless sea of stars, build a mature interstellar civilization, take root across the cosmos, and let human civilization flourish forever, passed from generation to generation.

This path of unity and shared prosperity is the only road to salvation for human civilization.

(Voice softens, tone deepens with sincerity)

Speaking of this, let me share some truths that came to me late at night.

These words were not written on paper. They came to me one night, after a shower, standing before a mirror, looking at my naked self, suddenly understanding.

I came with nothing. I will leave with nothing.

In between, these few decades — wearing the finest clothes, living in the biggest houses, eating the best food, holding the highest status — in the end, not one thing can be taken along.

So what do I leave behind?

I leave grain, if I was a farmer. I leave tools, if I was a craftsman. I leave healed lives, if I was a healer. I leave seeds planted in someone's heart, if I spoke even one true word.

Every person is like this.

You think you're consuming Earth's resources? No — you're leaving wealth for Earth. The house you built, someone else will live in after you. The road you paved, others will walk. The poem you wrote, others will read. The child you raised, others will continue creating.

As long as there is no war, every generation lightens the burden for the next. Later generations do not start from zero. They stand on the shoulders of giants. These giants are all those who have left this world but left behind houses, roads, knowledge, and peace.

The first generation built houses and cleared fields.

The second generation inherited houses and fields, then built schools and hospitals.

The third generation owned houses, fields, schools, hospitals, and began building roads and bridges.

The fourth generation, standing on the shoulders of the previous three, looked up at the stars and built telescopes and spaceships.

You see, as long as peace lasts long enough, each generation indeed lives more easily and happily than the last, eventually turning this world into a true paradise.

But war destroys all of this.

War levels houses to the ground. It blows up roads. It turns doctors, teachers, engineers, and artists into names on tombstones. It burns away in a few years the wealth that generations have painstakingly accumulated.

Then it does something even more poisonous: it plants seeds of hatred between people. These seeds sprout, take root, bloom, bear fruit, and their fruit becomes new seeds, passed down generation after generation.

Your child remembers: the enemy's army killed his grandfather.

Their child remembers: your army killed his father.

Then, when you grow strong, you strike back. When they grow strong, they strike again.

For centuries, for millennia, trapped in this endless cycle of hatred — building, destroying, weeping, dying, over and over.

You think it's "one war to settle everything"? It's actually "generations of blood debt."

You think you're "building an estate for your descendants"? You're actually "bequeathing them a legacy of hatred."

You think it's "peace forever after"? It's actually "turmoil without end."

Those who start wars say: "This is for the sake of future generations."

But what are they really doing?

They are signing a bill for future generations that can never be repaid.

What do they truly want?

They want their names carved on stone monuments. They want their portraits hanging in halls of posterity. They want history books to record: "Emperor So-and-So, during whose reign the territory expanded by X million square kilometers."

As for the price their descendants will pay — they don't care. By then they'll be dead anyway. They lie in grand mausoleums, enjoying incense offered by later generations, while their descendants bleed their last drops on battlefields, fighting for the land their ancestors grabbed.

Have you done the math?

Can your descendants hold onto the land you seized? Will the children of those you killed not seek revenge? How many generations' blood will it take to wash clean the hatred you plant today?

Those who truly care about their descendants would never do this.

Those who truly care about their descendants choose peace.

They spend military budgets on education, not on fighter jets.

They send top scientists to study how to deflect asteroids, not how to kill more efficiently.

They pour all their energy into building their own homeland, not plotting how to steal others'.

Because they know — leaving their descendants a world without hatred is more precious than any territory.

Land can be taken, retaken, bombed to ashes.

But a peaceful world — no one can take that away.

So today, I issue this simplest and most fundamental call to the whole world:

Let us do the math.

Let us see clearly who is truly working for the benefit of future generations, and who is using their descendants' futures to build monuments for themselves.

Let us choose the path that makes life easier for those who come after us, not the path that leaves them forever rebuilding from ruins.

Because this is the choice a mature human being should make.

(Voice shifts to solemn and steady)

At this point, allow us to explore a question buried deep in our hearts.

Why was humanity born into this world?

Everyone knows that when we raise livestock, feeding them and helping them grow, the ultimate purpose is to take their flesh and use their hides. That is the destiny assigned to lower life forms.

Yet what Heaven and Earth bestowed upon humanity is a vastly different configuration.

Heaven gave humanity an intelligent mind, not merely instinct for survival. It gave us dexterous hands, not merely the ability to forage for food. It gave us eyes that can look up at the stars, not merely stare at the ground beneath our feet.

Heaven and Earth have shown such favor to humanity — could it be merely so that we eat our fill, reproduce, and pass our days like penned livestock?

Absolutely not.

The higher the configuration, the greater the mission.

Heaven and Earth endowed humanity with such extraordinary gifts because there is one mission that only humanity can fulfill, that none of the billions of other life forms on Earth can accomplish.

That mission is — to guard this blue planet.

Jupiter and the Moon do shield Earth from countless interstellar fragments with their gravity. But their protection is passive. What they can block, they silently endure. What they cannot — like the giant asteroid that ended the age of dinosaurs sixty-five million years ago — they can only watch as catastrophe descends.

Humanity is fundamentally different.

Humanity has the ability to proactively respond to crises. We can calculate the trajectories of celestial bodies. We can launch spacecraft to alter orbits. We can shatter dangerous asteroids in the vastness of space before they strike Earth.

This is not science fiction. This is mission determined by configuration.

Heaven gave us such minds and hands not so we could tear at each other over scraps of land.

Humanity was born into this world to accomplish something that only humanity can achieve:

Let Earth no longer face the unknown risks of the cosmos alone. Let the tragedy of the dinosaurs' extinction never repeat itself in human civilization. Let the flame of intelligent life burn on, unextinguished, until it reaches the sea of stars.

Once you understand this, all confusion in this world becomes clear.

Now let me talk to you about something very important.

You might ask: Why should I finish reading this document? Why should I share it with my family and friends?

I'll tell you why —

Because this document speaks for you.

What kind of world do you want your children to grow up in? A world where they fear bombs falling on their roof every day? Or a world where they can go to school in peace, fall in love freely, and choose whatever they want to do with their lives?

What kind of place do you want your parents to spend their old age in? A damp air-raid shelter, trembling in fear? Or a sunny balcony, watching their grandchildren play in the yard?

What kind of life do you want for yourself? A life spent building, creating, and being with the people you love? Or a life spent in hatred, fear, and paying for wars that have nothing to do with you?

Every normal person has the answer to these questions deep in their heart.

But the problem is — many have the answer, but few dare to say it out loud.

This document says it for you.

It is not the idea of Shu Chong alone. It is the wish that lies in every normal person's heart but may never have been spoken: I don't want war. I want to live a good life. I want my children to have a better life than mine.

When you share this document with your family, friends, and colleagues, you are not promoting a stranger's idea. You are telling them: "Look, someone has written down what we all wanted to say but never did."

This is the meaning of sharing.

You are not sharing a document. You are sharing a possibility — helping more people realize: I am not alone. So many others feel the same way I do. They long for peace, for stability, for a day when Earth is free from war.

When more and more people realize this, peace will no longer be just a wish. It will become an unstoppable force.

So please read it to the end. And if it moves you, pass it on.

Not for Shu Chong. Not for the United Nations. But for yourself and for the people you love.

Now, let me put it in business terms.

Imagine Earth as startup capital. All of humanity are the original shareholders.

How much capital do we have? All of Earth's resources — land, minerals, oil, natural gas, forests, water. That is our total initial investment.

But here's the problem: instead of figuring out how to invest this capital, grow the business, and make more money, the shareholders are fighting among themselves. You grab my shares. I seize your assets. You occupy my land. I blow up your mines.

Back and forth, the company's assets shrink. The stock price crashes. Everyone loses. Money that could have been used to invest in the future is wasted on internal conflict.

Isn't that stupid?

What would smart shareholders do?

First, hold on to your current shares. Whatever you have now is yours. No one takes from anyone else.

Second, stop the infighting. Take the money you were spending on fighting and put it into R&D.

Third — and most importantly — use this startup capital to invest in a project unlike any before.

What project? Interstellar exploration.

What's the return on this investment? The entire universe.

The Milky Way has a hundred billion stars. Around each star, there may be multiple planets. Those planets contain inexhaustible resources, limitless energy, and vast expanses of living space.

If we stop fighting among ourselves and pour all our capital, technology, and talent into this project —

One day, the company will go public. And its market value will exceed anything we can imagine.

At that moment, every original shareholder — every person on Earth — will receive a tremendous dividend.

What is that dividend?

A planet of your own.

If you love mountains, you get a planet full of mountains. If you love the ocean, you get a water world. If you love solitude, you get a quiet planet far from the noise.

I prophesy that one day, the dream of one person, one planet will come true.

When that day comes, look back at Earth today — at the wars fought over oil fields and borderlines for decades. Won't it all seem ridiculous?

So stop fighting. Earth is our startup capital, not our battlefield. Protect it. Use it to invest in the sea of stars.

That is where humanity's true future lies.

Finally, we speak from the heart to every listener, every leader guiding the fate of nations:

This world is filled with beauty. There is warm sunshine, clear rivers, the smiles of loved ones, the tender embrace of those who care for us.

This world is so beautiful that souls would willingly return to it again and again. If humanity maintains lasting peace and tranquility, countless kind souls will gladly come back to this warm and wonderful home time after time.

But if humanity remains obstinately trapped in conflict and division, scarring the Earth, deepening estrangement, filling this beautiful home with pain and wounds — then one day, no pure soul will be willing to come to this devastated world filled with pain and wounds.

Even more alarming: prolonged internal conflict will ultimately destroy Earth's ecological foundations, making our precious home uninhabitable.

Therefore, safeguarding peace and stability in this world is to protect the right of countless souls to return to a beautiful world. It is to make a solemn promise to every sincere soul: this blue home will forever be warm and clear, forever worthy of their return and presence.

Here, let us revisit a classic tale passed down for millennia — The Foolish Old Man Who Removed the Mountains.

In ancient times, two great mountains, Taihang and Wangwu, blocked the path ahead. An old man named Yu Gong, wanting to open a way for future generations, resolved to move these mountains with his own effort.

People mocked him, saying he was too old to move even a single rock.

Yu Gong replied without wavering: "When I die, my son will carry on. When my son dies, my grandson will continue. Generation after generation, without end. The mountains will not grow taller. Why should I worry about not leveling them?"

His unwavering sincerity moved Heaven and Earth, and the mountains were finally removed, opening the way forward.

Today, we aspire to become modern-day Yu Gongs.

What we seek to remove is not physical mountains, but an invisible mountain that sits in people's hearts — the mountain of stubborn, narrow-minded opposition. This invisible mountain blocks all of humanity from reaching a harmonious world, exploring the vast galaxy, and marching toward a long-term future.

Alone, our strength is limited. But we have never walked alone.

All who believe in harmony, coexistence, and peace, all who hold love in their hearts — they are modern-day Yu Gongs, steadfast in their mission.

The convictions held by our predecessors can be carried forward by later generations. The kindness passed on by all people can be amplified by those who come after. All who hold goodwill in their hearts and yearn for a peaceful world, together with their descendants, can join hands on this journey toward peace.

Yu Gong of old said: "Generation after generation, without end."

Today, we declare with one voice: Humanity that holds goodwill in its heart and yearns for a peaceful world — it too continues without end, generation after generation!

As long as we pass on the message of peace from generation to generation, promote the ideal of harmonious coexistence from generation to generation, awaken the sincere hearts hidden within people from generation to generation —

This invisible mountain blocking humanity's progress will one day be completely leveled and vanish without a trace!

At this moment, I ask every listener, no matter which corner of the world you come from, no matter what language you speak, to join me in making this solemn vow from the bottom of your heart:

We, as mature members of humanity, hold firm to our true nature and reject stubborn, confrontational thinking.

We dissolve barriers with honest communication, replacing confrontation with cooperation.

We guard our one and only Earth home with all our hearts, keeping our minds clear and refusing to be blinded by prejudice.

We willingly become modern-day Yu Gongs, passing harmony and goodwill from generation to generation, marching toward the distant sea of stars.

From this day forward, we will preach the message of peace every day, call for peace and stability every day, spread the ideal of shared global prosperity every day! The hopes for peace we cannot fulfill in this lifetime, we entrust to future generations to carry forward! Generation after generation, passing on this sincere commitment to peace!

We sincerely invite every listener to join the ranks of modern-day Yu Gongs. Pass the beautiful ideal of peace and harmony in your heart to those around you, to friends and family, to future generations.

Until all humanity awakens completely: War is wrong. Warmongering is sinful. Internal strife is self-destruction. Those who start wars are the enemies of all humanity!

One day, we will completely dissolve the stubborn, confrontational thoughts in every human heart. Let this blue Earth be forever free from the smoke of war, free from estrangement between peoples, free from pointless confrontation!

Let this world of conflict and division be completely transformed into a world of harmony and peace, where all hearts beat as one as we march toward the sea of stars!

This is the sincere and solemn vow we make to all humanity from the depths of our hearts. This is the only path to salvation for the long-term survival and steady progress of human civilization!

Original Authorship & Permanent License Statement

Author & Speaker: Shu Chong (数虫)

A contemporary Yu Gong who found the truth in quiet self-reflection late one night.

Original Authorship Declaration

All core ideas, original viewpoints, and the complete textual content of this speech manuscript were independently created by Shu Chong and first published as a preprint in June 2026. Shu Chong is the sole original creator and legal holder of the moral right of attribution for this work.

Permanent Open License

Effective from the date of this preprint's publication, Shu Chong, acting in the supreme interest of promoting peaceful coexistence and ensuring the sustainable continuation of human civilization, voluntarily and irrevocably grants all people, groups, organizations, and governmental institutions worldwide the permanent right to freely disseminate, translate, reasonably adapt, and publicly perform this manuscript in whole or in part, without requiring further permission from the original author.

Terms of Use

To protect the integrity of this work's core ideas and the original author's right of attribution, all use must comply with the following three conditions:

- 1.Full attribution must be retained. Any form of dissemination, citation, or adaptation must clearly credit "Original author: Shu Chong (数虫)" or note that "This idea originates from Shu Chong's 'Global Unity, End Wars, Reach for the Cosmic Future' speech manuscript." Fabricating earlier sources or claiming authorship by impersonation is strictly prohibited.
- 2.The core ideas and original expressions contained herein may not be registered as copyright, trademark, or any form of intellectual property by any party other than the original author.
- 3.For large-scale commercial use (including but not limited to film adaptation, formal book publication, commercial public performance, paid educational courses, etc.), please contact the original author Shu Chong to discuss collaboration and ensure the peace-oriented message is not distorted or exploited. The original author commits to responding with openness, inclusiveness, and genuine cooperation to all commercial initiatives aimed at spreading the message of peace.

Contact

If you wish to discuss topics related to human peace, interstellar civilization, or potential collaboration for the above-mentioned commercial development, you may reach me at:

1.Email: 1428436648@qq.com

2.Email: shuchong2026@outlook.com

3.Email: s10044@163.com

Written from a corner of this blue planet. My sincere heart beats together with every soul on Earth that yearns for peace.

Global Unity, End Wars, Reach for the Cosmic Future.

We are all modern-day Yu Gongs, bound by love for all humanity.

© Original authorship: Shu Chong, June 2026

First Preprint · Global Unity, End Wars, Reach for the Cosmic Future · Released June 2026 · © Original Authorship: Shu Chong